

Defence

Have you ever noticed?

That when an animal feels threatened

It usually has some kind of way of telling its predators to back off,

Like with some frogs, if their predator was to bite them he'd die because of the chemicals in the

Brightly marked skin,

Or even an

Australian animal,

An echidna is untouched by its predators because they dare not

Tackle with a creature the size of a soccer ball

But covered in thick spines capable of ripping the skin
